

Mike Whellans

the one man blues band

Fired-Up & Ready

“Mike Whellans is a consummate bluesman:
a brilliant songwriter, a sharp singer,
and a mean hand at the guitar.

Think of him as a Jimmy Reed or Willie Dixon transplanted from Lake Michigan to the shores of Loch Lomond”

UTNE READER

Mike Whellans is the real thing, a keeper of the one-man blues band flame that burned so passionately in the work of this highly specialised form's masters, including Doctor Isaiah Ross, Jesse Fuller and Whellans' great British forerunner, Tony 'Duster' Bennett.

Like all true bluesmen and women, when Whellans sings and plays, he means it. He can set a scene of darkness and foreboding as the Boogie Man lurks, play twelve-string guitar in the grand driving blues tradition to propel his Winding Track, and sing of hugging his baby's deserted pillow so that you really feel his loss.

The one-man blues band is self-sufficient, of course, but as with Bennett, Whellans can call on other musicians to expand his palette and yet retain the spirit of individuality that is his major strength - even when guests such as David Bromberg have recorded their parts on different continents.

If you're already familiar with Whellans, you'll know to expect blues that's fired up and ready. But if this is your introduction, prepare to hear a talent who's not only his own man as a singer, guitarist and ace blues harpist, he's his own rhythm section, too.
